NEWSPAPER POLL WILL SOUND OUT POPULAR OPINION

TRIBUNE JOINS WITH PRESSES OF NATION IN GREATEST POLL ON NATIONAL ISSUES EVER ATTEMPTED.

What does America need? Ever since the war Americans have sensed unrest throughout the country—orderly unrest, but nevertheless unsettled conditons, uncertainty, everywhere. What are the causes, what is needed? Construction, business enterprise, new industries are being delayed by this uncertainty just at a time when the world looks to America to take the lead in reconstruction!

In an effort to find the answer to America's great question the Daily Tribune is joining in a nation-wide sensing of national opinion on national questions by hundreds of the most representative newspapers of the nation.

What Do You Think?

What do YOU think America needs? Write your opinions, discussing any matters you may think connected with the present national situation. Business in government, saner living, liberalism, more laws, prohibition, less laws, religion, reaction from war hysteria, less plutocracy, liquor, moral uplift, "open shop", more charity—what is it we need?

Send your letters to the Editor, Wisconsin Rapids Daily Tribune. After they are published in the Tribune they will be sent on to the NEA Service, which is handling the poll from the national aspect, the results will be tabulated, and resulting survey of national opinion will be carried in this paper.

Write your letters on one side of the paper only. Sign your name and address. Letters must not be longer than 200 words.

Show Sentiment of Nation

This poll is the first attempt on a nation wide scale to find out just how the people of the United States really do think on the vital question of the day. It is absolutely without bias of any sort and will give the honest opinions of millions of American citizens on not one, but a great number of pressing problems.

Every reader of the Tribune has opinions on the great national questions. Here is an opportunity to express these opinions, to get them before your fellow citizens, and weigh your opinions against those of the whole nation.

It is the hope of the hundreds of newspapers participating in this poll that the response will be such that it will sound in unmistakable terms the will of the people. If so it will constitute a warning and a guide to the representatives of the people at Washington which they can scarcely fail to heed. Don't fail to have your opinion recorded.

NEW DIST. ATTY. OUTLINES PLANS OF PROSECUTION

R. R. WILLIAMS, DIST. ATTY.-ELECT, LAYS DOWN THREE ACCOMPLISHMENTS FOR THE CONTINGENT FUND

Dist. Atty. Elect R. R. Williams of Marshfield appeared before the county board this morning and made an able address concerning the duties of his office and gained an understanding with the board members on the purposes of the contingent fund of $5,000 which was appropriated by the board as a means of assisting the district attorney in the prosecution of liquor law violations and speeding. He named three accomplishments which he believed possible.

Assistant Prosecutor

The first of Mr. Williams accomplishments with the money appropriated is to be the selection and appointment of an assistant district attorney, whose special duty is to be the prosecution of the liquor law violators and the highway speeding cases.

The second named by Mr. Williams was the picketing of dance halls in the county by citizens who will notify the owners that irregularities would be reported to the district attorney's office. Each one of the dance hall inspectors as proposed was to make a report of the conditions of the dance to the prosecutor's office Mr. Williams outlined.

To Have Patrolman

The third named by the new district attorney was the appointment of a county patrolman or inspector whose duty it was to seek the cooperation of all the city, village and town officers for the enforcement of the highway and traffic laws and ordinances and especially the speed ordinance.

Sees Menace

"The menace as I see it is the manufacturer and distributor of moonshine and other booze," Mr. Williams stated. "The booze gets into the hands of youngsters, especially young boys, who frequent the country dance halls and the trouble starts. I do not so much blame the boys or those who buy or happen to have the liquor. It is the manufacturer of the moonshine that is to have our especial attention.

Mr. Williams hinted that there would be a strict watch made for the out-of-county moon-makers and rum-runners, who come in from out of the county and there will be extra effort made to stop the traffic from outside as well as local still operators.

Word arrived today that Governor Hyde of Missouri had honored the request for extradition, and Sheriff Mueller left immediately to bring the boy back here for trial on the theft charges.

TELLS ROMANCE OF EARLY DAYS

POLITICAL EXPERIMENTATION NOT ONLY THING WISCONSIN IS NOTED FOR DOUDNA TELLS ROTARIANS

The romance of Wisconsin's early history and development was traced by E. G. Doudna in an address before the Rotary Club of Wausau Monday noon.

"Wisconsin is sometimes thought of as a political laboratory," Mr. Doudna said, "and it is true that at times we have experiments and explosions, but we must not forget or overlook our great history, the men and women who have given great inventions, written great books and noble poems, adding the world to live and do better.

"We have become so obsessed with the idea that Wisconsin has disgraced herself politically and otherwise at times that we have forgotten the glories and romances of this great commonwealth. Nowhere has romance and thrilling adventure been more prevalent than in the early history o. Wisconsin."

Tells of First White Man

He depicted the earliest days from the time when Jean Nicolet came from Montreal to this section, only fourteen years after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers on Plymouth Rock and told how Nicolet gathered furs and went home and how other trappers and fur dealers and Jesuit priests came, and how Father Manard became the first martyr of the state and was buried somewhere between Wausau and Merrill.

Turning from the early explorers and settlers to the Indians, Mr. Doudna asserted that in his opinion the qualities of the redman as shown in deeds of patriotism and devotion have not been sufficiently recognized.

"The Black Hawk war," he said, "the last effort of the Red man to hold on to his own, was a war in which the Indian was in the right."

He told the romance of the Indian princess, "The Glory of the Morning", who wedded Decorah, the Winnebago chief, and how of the descendants of this couple thirty-four of them enlisted in the great war and did valiant, patriotic service in the battle of the Argonne and other engagements in which many of them lost their lives.

TELLS CONGRESS MERCHANT MARINE MUST HAVE HELP

COMPARES AID FOR OCEAN TRANSPORTATION TO SIMILAR HELP GIVEN IN BUILDING OF HIGHWAYS.

(By Associated Press)

Washington, Nov. 21—Enactment of the administration merchant marine bill was urged upon congress today by President Harding as necessary to relieve the government of present "staggering losses" in the operation of war built ships and to build adequate ships to serve the nation in war and to give a guarantee of commercial independence in times of peace.

Personally addressing a joint session of the House and Senate the executive declared the actual monitory saved by the government lay in the proposed law. Contrary to the insinuations of a favored interest, and the enriching of a special few at the expense of the public treasury, the legislation, he asserted, automatically worked against enrichment or perpetual bestowal.

Foreign Nations Oppose

The president said the concern about the American merchant marine policy was not limited "to our own domain." He added that the maritime nations of the world "were in complete accord with the opposition here to the pending measure."

He declared those nations had a perfect right to such attitude but that he wished to stress the American view point which he said, would be the view point "of all American carriers," which depends on American commerce and American vessels, and American reliance in the event of war.

Mr. Harding declared he would be against the discouraging of any policy of "such tremendous national importance," because of any geographical, professional or partisan objection. Ample agencies for the promotion of carrying of American commerce, he asserted, were of no less importance to the people of the Mississippi and Missouri valley, the great Northwest, and the Rocky Mountain states than to the seaboard states, or industrial communities inland.

Compares to Highways

"If the government saw fit to authorize $75,000,000 to the promotion of good roads for American highways," the president added, "it is equally fit to apply to shipment and the maintenance of America's highways on the 'salty seas'."

He called attention to the fact that the government ships were being worn out with no provision for replacement, and that the problem of losses and sacrifices and liquidations which he declared would be inevitable unless the proposed legislation were enacted, would cost a score of millions.

(By Associated Press)

Washington, Nov. 21—The administration merchant marine bill, with amendments agreed to yesterday by Republican members, was formally reported out by the House merchant marine committee today without a record vote, while President Harding was arranging to go to the capitol and address a joint session of Congress in the interest of the legislation.

Almond Without Lights After Power House Blaze

Almond, Wis.—The village of Almond has been without electric lights since Saturday and there is a possibility that this condition may continue until next spring.

A fire which broke out in the power house at about 7:30 o'clock that morning is believed to have practically ruined the oil burning engine and other operating machinery and badly damaged the roof. The building is constructed of cement blocks and beyond what injury was done to the roof timbers it was almost unscathed.

K. M. Haugen of Wausau spent Tuesday in this city.

WEATHER

A jury in Judge E. N. Pomainville's court yesterday returned a verdict of $100 in favor of Neal Crowns, Sr., of Nekoosa in his suit against Mrs. Emma Stark Beigel for $100 commission which he alleged she owed him for the recent sale of a tract of land south of Nekoosa.

Crowns, it was brought out at the trial, handled the sale of 40 acres of land for Mrs. Beigel, which he disposed of to Carl Schenk, a farmer living south of Nekoosa, for $1,100.

The jury, consisting of Robert Matthews, Tony Edwards, Arthur Forstner, Ernie Andrews, I. A. MacDonald and Wm. Henke was out less than ten minutes before bringing in the verdict for the plaintiff.

Mr. Crowns was represented by Attorney Chas. Briere and Atty. James Dutton appeared for Mrs. Beigel.

Former Point Resident, Masonic Leader, Is Dead

(By Associated Press)

Kenosha, Wis., Nov. 21—Melvin Warren, 66, widely known Masonic leader, was found dead in bed here this morning. Death is believed to have been due to heart failure brought about by the hardening of the arteries.

Mr. Warren had been a leader in the work of the Masonic order in Wisconsin for over forty years and was at one time high priest of the order in Wisconsin.

Before coming to Kenosha about 18 years ago, he was foreman of the car shops of the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company at Stevens Point.

Elimination of waste in industry will be the principal topic of discussion at the sixth annual New York State Industrial Conference, which is to meet in Buffalo today for a ssesion of three days.

Sheriff Goes To Bring Wilson Boy Back For Trial

Sheriff Walter C. Mueller left today for Kansas City, Mo., to bring back Clifford Wilson, the 11 year old town of Saratoga boy who gained nation wide publicity for himself and for Wood county by telling the Kansas City police that he "ran away from home because his grandfather gave him nothing but whiskey for dinner."

Young Wilson, who ran away following the alleged theft of $40 in cash, a gold watch and other valuables from his grandfather, John Wilson, a civil war veteran, has been in the custody of the Kansas City authorities for the pas. week while the papers necessary to authorize his return to Wood county were being prepared. Word arrived today that Governor Hyde of Missouri had honored the request for extradition, and Sheriff Mueller left immediately to bring the boy back here for trial on the theft charges.

TELLS ROMANCE OF EARLY DAYS

POLITICAL EXPERIMENTATION NOT ONLY THING WISCONSIN IS NOTED FOR DOUDNA TELLS ROTARIANS

The romance of Wisconsin's early history and development was traced by E. G. Doudna in an address before the Rotary Club of Wausau Monday noon.

"Wisconsin is sometimes thought of as a political laboratory," Mr. Doudna said, "and it is true that at times we have experiments and explosions, but we must not forget or overlook our great history, the men and women who have given great inventions, written great books and noble poems, aiding the world to live and do better.

"We have become so obsessed with the idea that Wisconsin has disgraced herself politically and otherwise at times that we have forgotten the glories and romances of this great commonwealth. Nowhere has romance and thrilling adventure been more prevalent than in the early history of Wisconsin."

Tells of First White Man

He depicted the earliest days from the time when Jean Nicolet came from Montreal to this section, only fourteen years after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers on Plymouth Rock, and told how Nicolet gathered furs and went home and how other trappers and fur dealers and Jesuit priests came, and how Father Manard became the first martyr of the state and was buried somewhere between Wausau and Merrill.

Turning from the early explorers and settlers to the Indians, Mr. Doudna asserted that in his opinion the qualities of the redman as shown in deeds of patriotism and devotion have not been sufficiently recognized.

"The Black Hawk war," he said, "the last effort of the Red man to hold onto his own, was a war in which the Indian was in the right."

He told the romance of the Indian princess, "The Glory of the Morning", who wedded Decorah, the Winnebago chief, and how of the descendants of this couple thirty-four of them enlisted in the great war and did valiant, patriotic service in the battle of the Argonne and other engagements in which many of them lost their lives.

TELLS CONGRESS MERCHANT MARINE MUST HAVE HELP

COMPARES AID FOR OCEAN TRANSPORTATION TO SIMILAR HELP GIVEN IN BUILDING OF HIGHWAYS.

(By Associated Press)

Washington, Nov. 21—Enactment of the administration merchant marine bill was urged upon congress today by President Harding as necessary to relieve the government of present "staggering losses" in the operation of war built ships and to build adequate ships to serve the nation in war and to give a guarantee of commercial independence in times of peace.

Personally addressing a joint session of the House and Senate the executive declared the actual monitory saved by the government lay in the proposed law. Contrary to the insinuations of a favored interest, and the enriching of a special few at the expense of the public treasury, the legislation, he asserted, automatically worked against enrichment or perpetual bestowal.

Foreign Nations Oppose

The president said the concern about the American merchant marine policy was not limited "to our own domain." He added that the maritime nations of the world "were in complete accord with the opposition here to the pending measure."

He declared those nations had a perfect right to such attitude but that he wished to stress the American view point, which he said, would be the view point "of all American carriers," which depends on American commerce and American vessels, and American reliance in the event of war.

Mr. Harding declared he would be against the discouraging of any policy of "such tremendous national importance," because of any geographical, professional or partisan objection. Ample agencies for the promotion of carrying of American commerce, he asserted, were of no less importance to the people of the Mississippi and Missouri valley, the great Northwest, and the Rocky Mountain states than to the seaboard states, or industrial communities inland.

Compares to Highways

"If the government saw fit to authorize $75,000,000 to the promotion of good roads for American highways," the president added, "it is equally fit to apply to shipment and the maintenance of America's highways on the 'salty seas'."

He called attention to the fact that the government ships were being worn out with no provision for replacement, and that the problem of losses and sacrifices and liquidations which he declared would be inevitable unless the proposed legislation were enacted, would cost a score of millions.

(By Associated Press)

Washington, Nov. 21—The administration merchant marine bill, with amendments agreed to yesterday by Republican members, was formally reported out by the House merchant marine committee today without a record vote, while President Harding was arranging to go to the capitol and address a joint session of Congress in the interest of the legislation.

Almond Without Lights After Power House Blaze

Almond, Wis.—The village of Almond has been without electric lights since Saturday and there is a possibility that this condition may continue until next spring.

A fire which broke out in the power house at about 7:30 o'clock that morning is believed to have practically ruined the oil burning engine and other operating machinery and badly damaged the roof. The building is constructed of cement blocks and beyond what injury was done to the roof timbers it was almost unscathed.

K. M. Haugen of Wausau spent Tuesday in this city.

PREPARING IN PEACE FOR WAR

The United States Army Air Service has developed an automatic control device which is said to guide an airplane more accurately than a human pilot. With the automatic control or pilot, a craft is guided over a ninty-mile course. The invention may be used on any plane, making the latter a reliable offensive machine.

France has built and tried out a giant airplane which carries a cannon. It is, of course, an immense, highpower ship, and will be useful for night bombardment.

"In time of peace prepare for war" is the old saying. As most of the world is committed to disarmament, is it right to design a new craft and implements of destruction? The answer is, for the time being, at least, that a certain measure of preparedness is good sense and assurance of peace.

"READ, WRITE, ORGANIZE"

Premier Lenine of Russia addressed the Third Internationale, or Reds, in Moscow, on the status of Russia. Although his speech was not an open apology to his radical hearers for abandonment, to a great extent, of communism, it was such an explanation as the outside world might look on with a knowing smile. He said the soviet had gone too far and too fast, and conditions had necessitated adoption of capitalist measures.

Lenine may be seeing a new light, for he said: "The great task before the Russians is to learn. We must learn to read, to write, to organize."

If this policy is carried out, it will be the knell of socialism. People who learn how to read and write and also learn how to think, and when they learn how to think, they are through with paternalism of bureaucracy in any form.

THE INSANE ASYLUM

A truly wonderful institution, is the Wood County Insane Asylum for it is a model in every respect. While modern methods are used in the asylum from farming to peeling potatoes for the kitchen, the admiration of the person who visits the institution, is directed to the constructive work being done by Supt. Gilson in reclaiming those lost minds of the poor individuals who are kept there. County asylums usually get the incurables, the helpless, impossible mental cases. But in spite of the general run of mentally unsound patients committed there, Supt. Gilson has rebuilt ten of his patients and discharged them sane and useful citizens. This was done last year. Only one out of that number has been returned thus showing that the cure was complete.

The value of each human being is unlimited. To cure ten is a great piece of work, without doubt. The worth of this institution is many times the material inventory and material gain which was made by the asylum during the eleven years of its existence.

Just a word about the excellent business record attained by the asylum. A net gain of $179,000 in eleven years is a truly remarkable piece of business efficiency for in his great obligation to the people of the county to reclaim these people under his care, Mr. Gilson has given each and every one the finest care, finest food and the most comfortable sanitary quarters. Nothing has been spared in making their life as comfortable and pleasant as possible. Yet in giving them the best, the insitution through careful managmenthas made a wonderful business record.

CAN YOU ANSWER?

What does America need most? What is our weakest link, our "most crying need?"

You have often wondered. And you have talked the subject over with friend, family and neighbor.

Others have done the same—are doing it now.

Everyone is trying to figure out what our nation needs most. And, whatever it is, the reason it's needed is because there has been no way for Americans to get together collectively and talk it over, learning what to work for.

The ancient Greek cities could assemble the entire populace quickly. Views were exchanged. Suggestions were made. Out of this came an understanding of needs, also a program to get what was needed.

We cannot get together what way in a democracy with millions of people spread over an immense territory.

But we can get together through the thing that binds us all together mentally—print, the newspapers.

A committee, headed by Secretary Herbert Hoover, is at work on this problem:—"What does America need most?"

Meantime, let's put it up to the real committee—the American people.

The Daily Tribune, in cooperation with several hundred other newspapers affiliated with Nea Service, today starts sounding the mind of the American people on "What does America need most?"

What do you think? Maybe you have the best answer. Write your views, briefly, clearly, in a letter for publication. Send your letter to the Editor of the Daily Tribune.

REMARKABLE FLIGHT CONSIDERED MOST DARING EVER ATTEMPTED IN SOUTH AMERICA

Lima, Peru.—What is probably the most daring aviation feat yet recorded in South America is the flight by an American aviator, Elmer J. Faucett, from Lima to the Amazon port of Iquitos. Faucett, who is attached to the staff of the National Aeronautic Company of Peru, left Lima in a Curtiss "Oriole" plane, in an effort to win a prize of $5000.00 for the first airplane flight from this capital to Iquitos, offered by the Peruvian Congress. The first lap of the flight was to Chiclayo, 400 miles north of Lima. Faucett made this distance in six hours, and landed safely on the arid plains near that city.

Careful Preparation

Several weeks were required to get the plane in condition for the second stage of the flight, which was particularly dangerous in the absence of air maps or any other guides. Iquitos is more than 500 miles from Chiclayo in a straight air line, and the intervening country is as wild as can be found in South America. This region is a vast tangle of difficult mountain passes, cascades, and rapids until the highest ranges of the Andes are passed at an elevation of from 16,000 to 17,000 feet. The Maranon River and its affluents, which flow into the Amazon, have cut tremendous chasms in the ranges of the Andes, down which swift, turbulent streams flow in their course to the Atlantic. After that come the tropical lands leading up to the Amazon proper, where impenetrable jugles and swampy wastes make travel of any kind difficult.

It was over such a country that Faucett had to fly when he made his final "hop-off" from Chiclayo on October6. Had his motor failed him, no trace of aviator or plane would probably ever have been discovered. As it was, he was forced to land when only forty minutes of flying separated him from his goal. A driving rain and thunderstorm forced him down on an islet in the Tigre River, where his plane became mired in the soft sand, causing him to break a propeller. A passing launch from Iquitos picked him up and carried the stranded aviator to the isolated Amazon port, where he was given a tremendous ovation. His flying time from Chiclayo up to the moment of the accident was also six hours, or a total of twelve hours from Lima.

MISS BARTOSCH DRIVING THE COATS STEAMER IN JUNEAU PARK, MILWAUKEE

To start the day with a cold boiler, you turn on the ignition. The electric motor with its blower will raise enough steam that by the time you are ready to use the car, the auxiliary steam motor is running. This motor takes its steam from the boiler and operates constantly throughout the day, keeping your steam pressure at the desired amount. It has only taken a few minutes to have gotten under way, from once you entered the garage, and any time you care to make use of your car during the day, get in behind the wheel, open your throttle and you are away "always in high." Mud, sand, snow or steep hills are made pavements as you go along. You have an abundance of power at your finger tips regardless of the rate of travel, one-half to sixty miles per hour.

Cold, damp, or disagreeable weather has absolutely no effect upon the water or any parts of the car. You may leave the car standing at ten or thirty below zero without fear of anything freezing. Alcohol may also be used. The auxiliary motor relieves the driver of all the worries connected with the car of today.

There are no gears to shift, no valves to grind, no carbon to remove and it is impossible to kill the engine. There is no time lost in getting away in traffic by changing gears, nor is there any clutch or speed pedal to slip or operate. The engine operates quietly without jumps or jerks and has a positive force.

Kerosene is burnt for fuel and not exploded. Cylinder oil required is not worth mentioning. Five extra gallons of water will cover at least two hundred and fifty miles of travel.

The Coats Steamer will have a large dealer organization with one or two service stations to each county. Wisconsin purchasers will find numerous "Coats Authorized Dealer" signs. A large number of orders are already on file and those desiring early delivery should order early.

Our bodies are roomy, beautiful, with deep restful upholstering—the latest in open and closed types.

You Can Buy the Very Phonograph That Amazed Wisconsin Rapids

THE New Edison which sustained the test of direct comparison with Glen Ellison's living voice at the Auditorium last Thursday was not a special exhibition model. Reports to this effect are not true to facts. The instrument was an Official Laboratory Model taken from our own stock.

A similar test, applied to each Official Laboratory Model in our stock, would prove the uniform perfection of these remarkable phonographs.

Perhaps you were one of those in Thursday's audience who thought how enjoyable it would be to have a phinograph just like that for your very own. You can have an Official Laboratory Model—to perform in your own home the miracle demonstrated last Thursday.

The NEW EDISON

"The Phonograph With a Soul"

May we show you, at the store, the unbelievable realism of the Official Laboratory Model? Let us tell you about the Budget Plan, which will bring this model to your home for a small cash payment, the balance arranged to suit your convenience.

Note:—The test at the Auditorium, last Thursday, made by the world-famous Scotch baritone, Glen Ellison, proved that the New Edison alone can Re-Create the living voice. Mr. Ellison sang in direct comparison with the Re-Creation of his voice—there was no difference. No other phonograph has ever sustained this test.

It has only taken a few minutes to have gotten under way, from once you entered the garage, and any time you care to make use of your car during the day, get in behind the wheel, open your throttle and you are away "always in high." Mud, sand, snow or steep hills are made pavements as you go along. You have an abundance of power at your finger tips regardless of the rate of travel, one-half to sixty miles per hour.

Cold, damp, or disagreeable weather has absolutely no effect upon the water or any parts of the car. You may leave the car standing at ten or thirty below zero without fear of anything freezing. Alcohol may also be used. The auxiliary motor relieves the driver of all the worries connected with the car of today.

There are no gears to shift, no valves to grind, no carbon to remove and it is impossible to kill the engine. There is no time lost in getting away in traffic by changing gears, nor is there any clutch or speed pedal to slip or operate. The engine operates quietly without jumps or jerks and has a positive force.

Kerosene is burnt for fuel and not exploded. Cylinder oil required is not worth mentioning. Five extra gallons of water will cover at least two hundred and fifty miles of travel.

The Coats Steamer will have a large dealer organization with one or two service stations to each county. Wisconsin purchasers will find numerous "Coats Authorized Dealer" signs. A large number of orders are already on file and those desiring early delivery should order early.

Our bodies are roomy, beautiful, with deep restful upholstering—the latest in open and closed types.

You Can Buy the Very Phonograph That Amazed Wisconsin Rapids

THE New Edison which sustained the test of direct comparison with Glen Ellison's living voice at the Auditorium last Thursday was not a special exhibition model. Reports to this effect are not true to facts. The instrument was an Official Laboratory Model taken from our own stock.

A similar test, applied to each Official Laboratory Model in our stock, would prove the uniform perfection of these remarkable phonographs.

Perhaps you were one of those in Thursday's audience who thought how enjoyable it would be to have a phinograph just like that for your very own. You can have an Official Laboratory Model—to perform in your own home the miracle demonstrated last Thursday.

The NEW EDISON

"The Phonograph With a Soul"

May we show you, at the store, the unbelievable realism of the Official Laboratory Model? Let us tell you about the Budget Plan, which will bring this model to your home for a small cash payment, the balance arranged to suit your convenience.

Note:—The test at the Auditorium, last Thursday, made by the world-famous Scotch baritone, Glen Ellison, proved that the New Edison alone can Re-Create the living voice. Mr. Ellison sang in direct comparison with the Re-Creation of his voice—there was no difference. No other phonograph has ever sustained this test.

"The Masquerader"

By Catherine Cecil Thurston

Chilcote laughed sarcastically.

"When one has roiced one's country for six years one gets hoarse—it's a natural consequence."

The other smiled. "Ah, discontent!" he said. "The modern canker. But we must both be getting under way. Good-night! Shall we shake hands—to prove that we are genuinely material?"

Chilcote had been standing unusually still, following the stranger's words—caught by his self-reliance and impressed by his personality. Now, as he ceased to speak, he moved quickly forward, impelled by a nervous curiosity.

"Why should we just hail each other and pass—like the proverbial ships?" he said, impulsively. "If Nature was careless enough to let the reproduction meet the original, she must abide the consequences."

The other laughed, but his laugh was short. "Oh I don't know. Our roads lie differently. You would get nothing out of me, and I—" He stopped and again laughed shortly. "No," he said. "I'd be content to pass, if I were you. The unsuccessful man is seldom a profitable study. Shall we say good-night?"

He took Chilcote's hand for an instant; then, crossing the foot-path, he passed into the roadway towards the Strand.

It was done in a moment; but with his going a sense of loss fell upon Chilcote. He stood for a space, newly conscious of unfamiliar faces and unfamiliar voices in the stream of passers-by; then, suddenly mastered by an impluse, he wheeled rapidly and darted after the tall, lean figure so ridiculously like his own.

Half-way across Trafalgar Square he overtook the stranger. He had paused on one of the small stone islands that break the current of traffic and was waiting for an opportunity to cross the street. In the glare of light from the lamp above his head Chilcote saw for the first time that, under a remarkable neatness of appearance, his clothes were well worn—almost shabby. The discovery struck him with something stronger than surprise. The idea of poverty seemed incongruous in connection with the reliance, the reserve, the personality of the man. With a certain embarrassed haste he stepped forward and touched his arm.

"Look here," he said, as the other turned quietly, "I have followed you to exchange cards. It can't injure either of us, and I—I have a wish to know my other self." He laughed nervously as he drew out his card-case.

The stranger watched him in silence. There was the same faint contempt, but also there was a reluctant interest in his glance, as it passed from the fingers fumbling with the case to the pale face with the square jaw, straight mouth, and level eyebrows drawn low over the gray eyes. When at last the card was held out to him he took it without remark and slipped it into his pocket.

Chilcote looked at him eagerly "Now the exchange!" he said.

For a second the stranger did not respond. Then, almost unexpectedly, he smiled.

"After all, if it amuses you—"he said; and, searching in his waistcoat pocket, he drew out the required card.

"It will leave you quite unenlightened," he added. "The name of a failure never spells anything." With another smile, partly amused, partly ironical, he stepped from the little island and disappeared into the throng of traffic.

Chilcote stood for an instant gazing at the point where he had vanished; then turning to the lamp, he lifted the card and read the name it bore; "Mr. John Loder, 13 Clifford's Inn.

CHAPTER II

On the morning following the night of fog Chilcote woke at nine. He woke at the moment that his man Allsopp tiptoed across the room and laid the salver with his early cup of tea on the table beside the bed.

For several seconds he lay with his eyes shut; the effort of opening them on a fresh day—the intimate certainty of what he would see on opening them—seemed to weight his lids. The heavy, half-closed curtains; the blinds severly drawn; the great room with its splendid furniture, its sober coloring, its scent of damp London winter; above all, Allsopp, silent, respectful, and respectable—were things to dread.

A full minute passed while he still feigned sleep. He heard Allsopp stir discreetly then the inevitable information broke the silence:

"Nine o'clock, sir!"

He opened his eyes, murmured something, and closed them again.

The man moved to the window, quietly pulled back the curtains and half drew the blind.

"Better night, sir, I hope?" he ventured, softly.

Chilcote had drawn the bedcloths over his face to screen himself from the daylight, murky thought it was.

"Yes," he responded "Those beastly nightmares didn't trouble me, for once." He shivered a little as at some recollection. "But don't talk—don't remind me of them. I hate a man who has no originality." He spoke sharply At times he showed an almost childish irritation over trival things.

Allsopp took the remark in silence. Crossing the wide room, he began to lay out his master's cloths. The action affected Chilcote to fresh annoyance.

"Confound it!" he said. "I'm sick of that routine! I can see you laying out my winding-sheet the day of my burial. Leave those things. Come back in half an hour."

Allsopp allowed himself one glance at his master's figure huddled in the great bed; then, laying aside the coat he was holding, he moved to the door. With his fingers on the handle he paused.

"Will you breakfast in your own room, sir—or down-stairs?"

Chilcote drew the cloths more tightly round his shoulders. "Oh, anywhere—nowhere!" he said. "I don't care."

Allsopp softly withdrew.

Left to himself, Chilcote sat up in bed and lifted the salver to his knees. The sudden movement jarred him physically; he drew a handkerchief from under the pillow and wiped his forehead; then he held his hand to the light and studied it. The hand looked sallow and unsteady. With a nervous gesture he thrust the salver back upon the table and slid out of bed.

Moving hastily across the room, he stopped before one of the tall wardrobes and swung the door open; then after a furtive glance around the room he thrust his hand into the recesses of a shelf and fumbled there. The thing he sought was evidently not hard to find, for almost at once he withdrew his hand and moved from the wardrobe to a table beside the fireplace, carrying a small glass tube filled with tablids.

On the table were a decanter, a siphon and a water-jug. Mixing some whiskey, he uncorked the tube, again he glanced apprehensively towards the door, then with a very nervous hand dropped two tabloids into the glass.

While they dissolved he stood with his hand on the table and his eyes fixed on the floor, evidently restraining his impatience. Instantly they had disappeared he seized the glass and drained it at a draught, replaced the bottle in the wardrobe, and shivering slightly in the raw air, slipped back into bed.

When Allsopp returned he was sitting up, a cigarette between his lips, the teacup standing empty on the salver. The nervous irritability had gone from his manner. He no longer moved jerkily, his eyes looked brighter, his pale skin more healthy.

"Ah, Allsopp," he said, "there are some moments in life after all. It isn't all blank wall."

"I ordered breakfast in the small morning-room, sir," said Allsopp without a change of expression.

Chilcote breakfasted at ten. His appetite, always fickle, was particularly uncertain in the early hours. He helped himself to some fish, but sent away his plate untouched; then, having drunk two cups of tea, he pushed back his chair, lighted a fresh cigarette, and shook out the morning's newspaper.

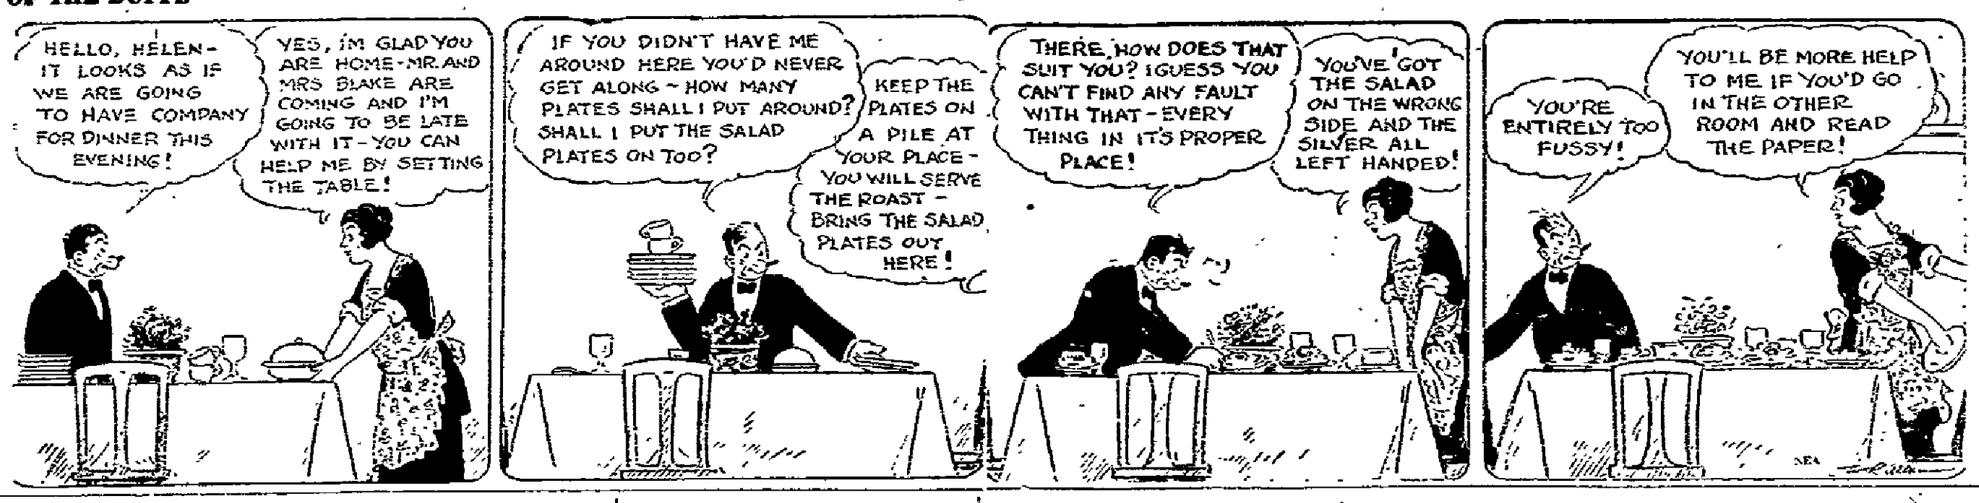
DOINGS OF THE DUFFS — A Great Help — BY ALLMAN



Triumphs of M. Jonquelle

by MELVILLE DAVISSON POST

© 1922 NEA Service, Inc

THE MAN WITH STEEL FINGERS.

Begin Here Today

M. JONQUELLE, greatest of French detectives, faced the man with steel fingers—

LORD VALLEYS, the powerful, half-Slav- half-English, nobleman who performed so brilliantly on the piano and who had recently succeeded to the wealth and title of his murdered uncle.

LORD WINTON.

Three lives had stood between Valleys and the title. But both of Lord Winton's sons were killed in the war, and his granddaughter, the only heir, an American, was barred from the position by English law.

Lord Valleys tells M. Jonquelle that his uncle was stabbed to death while Valleys was visiting him. Valley says he was down in the wine cellar at the time of the slaying but that circumstantial evidence caused the English authorities to charge him with murder.

Go on With the Story

CHAPTER III

LORD VALLEYS got up.

"It was to be expected, monsieur, that the English court under these circumstances would try for the murder of Lord Winton. I had both the motive and the opportunity to accomplish it, and the circumstances were, to say the last, indicative.

"To my surprise, this manservant Staley, came forward to establish the fact that the wine-cellar was little less than a straw-rick, and this Metropolitan police officer appeared to say that he had seen the hansom leaving Lord Winton's door shortly before the fire was discovered. These facts indicated the truth of my statement.

"A further fact brought out by my legal advisers established with mathematical accuracy the fact that I had not dealt Lord Winton the blow that ejected him out of life. The wound which had caused his death had been made with the small blade of a knife.

"The police found in my pocket a knife with a small blade, a blade of about the width of the wound. No evidence of blood was found on this knife, but the police professed to believe that it had been carefully washed. They thought traces of moisture remained on it. The case seemed convincing, I myself realized its gravity, and but for one fact a conviction might have followed.

"The autopsy showed that the wound which had caused the death of Lord Winton was seven inches deep. The handle of the knife with which it had been accomplished had not entered the wound. The wound was no longer than the width of the small knife-blade at its exterior point."

Lord Valleys suddenly extended his hand, like one who puts down something that is finished.

"And I was therefore acquitted . . . You know, monsieur, what the English law-courts say: 'A man may lie, but circumstances cannot' I may have lied, and Lord Winton's manservant and the Metropolitan police who saw the hansom drive away on that night; but the science of mathematics could not lie. A wound seven inches deep could not be made with a knife-blade four inches long. And the case ended."

He went over to a table got a tortoise-shell box delicately inlaid with silver, opened it and presented it to Monsieur Jonquelle.

"You will have a cigaret, monsieur?" he said.

Monsieur Jonquelle took the cigaret, and Lord Valleys went back to the chair.

Then suddenly, as out of some inciting memory, the man's voice changed.

"A moment ago, monsieur, when I mentioned the arrival of the visitor at Lord Winton's house, and the doubt of the English court of that fact you said it was true. How do you know that it was true, if I may be permitted to inquire?"

The Prefect of Police balanced the cigaret a moment in his fingers before he replied.

"I know your statement about the hansome is true, monsieur, because I know who it was that came to Lord Winton on that night. And, monsieur, it is on behalf of this person that I have come to you today."

Lord Valleys was astonished, but he did not move, and his expression did not change.

"You amaze me," he said. "Upon what mission from this mysterious person could you come to me?"

"Upon the same mission," replied the Prefect of Police, "with which that person went on the fatal night to Lord Winton's house in Covent Garden. Lord Winton promised to do a certain thing for this, as you call it, 'mysterious person.' He died before it could be carried out, and I have now come to you to fulfill it. I trust, monsieur, that you will not deny me."

Monsieur Jonquele rose. He took a folded, legal paper out of his pockets and presented it to Lord Valleys.

"Monsieur," he said, "Lord Winton promised me to execute this indenture. He died before his signature could be attached to it. I must ask you to execute it in his stead."

Suddenly, as once before on this morning, Lord Valleys was now with no motion that seemed visible to the eye, standing on his feet. He came forward, took the paper which Monsieur Jonquelle held in his hand, and going over to the table, unfolded it and stooped over it. He was some time in an inspection of the document and in the meantime Monsieur Jonquelle had made a gesture, as one of flicking the ashes from a cigaret through the open window into the Bois re Boulogne. The two young men in their animated discussion instantly crossed the street and entered the house.

Presently Lord Valleys rose from his stooped posture. He was shaken with aronishment, but there was of this aronishment no visible element, either in his appearance or in his voice.

"Monsieur," he said, "this is a deed drawn by an English solicitor conveying all of Lord Winton's estates in England to his grand-daughter, Barbara Westridge. Why, monsieur should I convey these estates to this American girl? They have descended to me by inheritance. One does not alienate his hands without a cause."

"I will suggest a reason," replied Monsieur Jonquelle. "This is in accordance with Lord Winton's promise. You stand now in Lord Winton's stead, and as I have said, you have received his benefits, and you should assume his obligations."

Lord Valleys smiled—that vague smile which seemed not to disturb the features of his face. He folded the deed together in his hand.

"You must permit me to decline, monsieur," he said.

He paused a moment, and the background of his face hardened.

"And you must overlook it, monsieur," he said, "if I feel that your whole suggestion with respect to this matter is not convincing. This girl could not have assassinated Lord Winton."

"She could not," replied Monsieur Jonquelle. "Lord Winton was killed by some powerful assassin who seized him, compressed his body and drove in the knife."

He turned now toward Lord Valleys, his face firm.

"Monsieur," he said, "will you carry out the obligation of Lord Winton and leave the matter of his assassin a mystery, or will you refuse it and have that mystery solved?"

The man at the table looked strangely at Monsieur Jonquelle. He had the aspect of a creature of great strength, concerned always and disturbed but his voice did not change

"You know, then, the assassin of Lord Winton?"

"I do," replied the Prefect. "Shall I name him to you?"

The man made again the vague gesture with his white, steel fingers.

"You must keep the secret of the name, monsieur," he said, "if you will be kind enough to tell me the thing that indicated to you the name."

"With pleasure," replied Monsieur Jonquelle. "You have said that the English criminal courts are stupid, and I have concurred in that opinion. Observe, monsieur, the evidence of that stupidity. This criminal court could not understand how a knife-blade four inches long could inflict a direct wound seven inches deep. They measured the knife-blade and the wound, these English, and wrote it down impossible. . . . But you, monsieur, who are Slav, and I who am Latin, would hardly arrive at this conclusion. For we would reflect that a knife-blade four inches long, driven into the soft tissues of the body compressed together by the impact of the powerful blow might easily leave a wound measuring seven inches in length behind it—when that compression was released and the tissues relaxed. It is a fact monsieur that the Service de la Surete has frequently demonstrated."

The man at the table was motionless, as in some indecision. He did not change. He remained only in a sort or dreadful immobility, and he seemed in this immobility to consider some desperate hazard. He was awakened by the two young men from the Bois re Boulogne, who now entered the drawing-room.

"Monsieur," said the voice of the Prefect of Police, "I feared that I might not be your equal in all directions, and I have asked these two agents of the Service to come up. They will also be useful as witnesses to the indenture."

Lord Valleys made no reply. He opened a drawer of the table, took out a pen and attached his signature to the deed—waited until the witnesses had signed it, blotted it carefully and folded it together, handed it to the Prefect of Police.

"I purchase immunity," he said, "from a second trial before the English criminal court.

Monsieur Jonquelle received the indenture and put it into his pocket. He took up his gloves, his hat, his stick; then he smiled.

"You purchased, monsieur," he said, "a thing that you already possess. It is the law of England that one who has been acquitted of a crime cannot again be tried in her court for it!"

Triumphs of M. Jonquelle

THE MAN WITH STEEL FINGERS

Begin Here Today

M. JONQUELLE, greatest of French detectives, faced the man with steel fingers—

LORD VALLEYS, the powerful, half-Slav- half-English, nobleman who performed so brilliantly on the piano and who had recently succeeded to the wealth and title of his murdered uncle,

LORD WINTON.

Three lives had stood between Valleys and the title. But both of Lord Winton's sons were killed in the war, and his granddaughter, the only heir, an American, was barred from the position by English law.

Lord Valleys tells M. Jonquelle that his uncle was stabbed to death while Valleys was visiting him. Valley says he was down in the wine cellar at the time of the slaying but that circumstantial evidence caused the English authorities to charge him with murder.

Go on With the Story

CHAPTER III

LORD VALLEYS got up.

"It was to be expected, monsieur, that the English court under these circumstances would try for the murder of Lord Winton. I had both the motive and the opportunity to accomplish it, and the circumstances were, to say the last, indicative.

"To my surprise, this manservant Staley, came forward to establish the fact that the wine-cellar was little less than a straw-rick, and this Metropolitan police officer appeared to say that he had seen the hansom leaving Lord Winton's door shortly before the fire was discovered. These facts indicated the truth of my statement.

"A further fact brought out by my legal advisers established with mathematical accuracy the fact that I had not dealt Lord Winton the blow that ejected him out of life. The wound which had caused his death had been made with the small blade of a knife.

"The police found in my pocket a knife with a small blade, a blade of about the width of the wound. No evidence of blood was found on this knife, but the police professed to believe that it had been carefully washed. They thought traces of moisture remained on it. The case seemed convincing, I myself realized its gravity, and but for one fact a conviction might have followed.

"The autopsy showed that the wound which had caused the death of Lord Winton was seven inches deep. The handle of the knife with which it had been accomplished had not entered the wound. The wound was no longer than the width of the small knife-blade at its exterior point."

Lord Valleys suddenly extended his hand, like one who puts down something that is finished.

"And I was therefore acquitted . . . You know, monsieur, what the English law-courts say: 'A man may lie, but circumstances cannot' I may have lied, and Lord Winton's manservant and the Metropolitan police who saw the hansom drive away on that night; but the science of mathematics could not lie. A wound seven inches deep could not be made with a knife-blade four inches long. And the case ended."

He went over to a table got a tortoise-shell box delicately inlaid with silver, opened it and presented it to Monsieur Jonquelle.

"You will have a cigaret, monsieur?" he said.

Monsieur Jonquelle took the cigaret, and Lord Valleys went back to the chair.

Then suddenly, as out of some inciting memory, the man's voice changed.

"A moment ago, monsieur, when I mentioned the arrival of the visitor at Lord Winton's house, and the doubt of the English court of that fact you said it was true. How do you know that it was true, if I may be permitted to inquire?"

The Prefect of Police balanced the cigaret a moment in his fingers before he replied.

"I know your statement about the hansome is true, monsieur, because I know who it was that came to Lord Winton on that night. And, monsieur, it is on behalf of this person that I have come to you today."

Lord Valleys was astonished, but he did not move, and his expression did not change.

"You amaze me," he said. "Upon what mission from this mysterious person could you come to me?"

"Upon the same mission," replied the Prefect of Police, "with which that person went on the fatal night to Lord Winton's house in Covent Garden. Lord Winton promised to do a certain thing for this, as you call it, 'mysterious person.' He died before it could be carried out, and I have now come to you to fulfill it. I trust, monsieur, that you will not deny me."

Monsieur Jonquele rose. He took a folded, legal paper out of his pockets and presented it to Lord Valleys.

"Monsieur," he said, "Lord Winton promised me to execute this indenture. He died before his signature could be attached to it. I must ask you to execute it in his stead."

Suddenly, as once before on this morning, Lord Valleys was now with no motion that seemed visible to the eye, standing on his feet. He came forward, took the paper which Monsieur Jonquelle held in his hand, and going over to the table, unfolded it and stooped over it. He was some time in an inspection of the document and in the meantime Monsieur Jonquelle had made a gesture, as one of flicking the ashes from a cigaret through the open window into the Bois re Boulogne. The two young men in their animated discussion instantly crossed the street and entered the house.

Presently Lord Valleys rose from his stooped posture. He was shaken with atonishment, but there was of this atonishment no visible element, either in his appearance or in his voice.

"Monsieur," he said, "this is a deed drawn by an English solicitor conveying all of Lord Winton's estates in England to his grand-daughter, Barbara Westridge. Why, monsieur should I convey these estates to this American girl? They have descended to me by inheritance. One does not alienate his hands without a cause."

"I will suggest a reason," replied Monsieur Jonquelle. "This is in accordance with Lord Winton's promise. You stand now in Lord Winton's stead, and as I have said, you have received his benefits, and you should assume his obligations."

Lord Valleys smiled—that vague smile which seemed not to disturb the features of his face. He folded the deed together in his hand.

"You must permit me to decline, monsieur ,"he said.

He paused a moment, and the background of his face hardened.

"And you must overlook it, monsieur," he said, "if I feel that your whole suggestion with respect to this matter is not convincing. This girl could not have assassinated Lord Winton."

"She could not," replied Monsieur Jonquelle. "Lord Winton was killed by some powerful assassin who seized him, compressed his body and drove in the knife."

He turned now toward Lord Valleys, his face firm.

"Monsieur," he said, "will you carry out the obligation of Lord Winton and leave the matter of his assassin a mystery, or will you refuse it and have that mystery solved?"

The man at the table looked strangely at Monsieur Jonquelle. He had the aspect of a creature of great strength, concerned always and disturbed but his voice did not change

"You know, then, the assassin of Lord Winton?"

"I do," replied the Prefect. "Shall I name him to you?"

The man made again the vague gesture with his white, steel fingers.

"You must keep the secret of the name, monsieur," he said, "if you will be kind enough to tell me the thing that indicated to you the name,"

"With pleasure," replied Monsieur Jonquelle. "You have said that the English criminal courts are stupid, and I have concurred in that opinion. Observe, monsieur, the evidence of that stupidity. This criminal court could not understand how a knife-blade four inches long could inflict a direct wound seven inches deep. They measured the knife-blade and the wound, these English, and wrote it down impossible. . . . But you, monsieur, who are Slav, and I who am Latin, would hardly arrive at this conclusion. For we would reflect that a knife-blade four inches long, driven into the soft tissues of the body compressed together by the impact of the powerful blow might easily leave a wound measuring seven inches in length behind it—when that compression was released and the tissues relaxed. It is a fact monsieur that the Service de la Surete has frequently demonstrated."

The man at the table was motionless, as in some indecision. He did not change. He remained only in a sort or dreadful immobility, and he seemed in this immobility to consider some desperate hazard. He was awakened by the two young men from the Bois re Boulogne, who now entered the drawing-room.

"Monsieur," said the voice of the Prefect of Police, "I feared that I might not be your equal in all directions, and I have asked these two agents of the Service to come up. They will also be useful as witnesses to the indenture."

Lord Valleys made no reply. He opened a drawer of the table, took out a pen and attached his signature to the deed—waited until the witnesses had signed it, blotted it carefully and folded it together, handed it to the Prefect of Police.

"I purchase immunity," he said, "from a second trial before the English criminal court.

Monsieur Jonquelle received the indenture and put it into his pocket. He took up his gloves, his hat, his stick; then he smiled.

"You purchased, monsieur," he said, "a thing that you already possess. It is the law of England that one who has been acquitted of a crime cannot again be tried in her court for it!"

THEATRES

"UNDER TWO FLAGS" A STUPENDOUS PRODUCTION

"Under Two Flags" the magnificent picturization of Ouida's famous story and play is without exception the most stupendous creation that has come to the silver sheet this year. "The Picture Magnificent" is the name given it because of the massiveness of its staging, the number of men and horses involved in the making and the tremendous scope of the story, which outshines "The Sheik" in desert atmosphere. In this production, Priscilla Dean far outdoes all her former efforts, even those in "Outside The Law" and opposite her as the mysterious "Corporal Victor of the Chasseurs d' Afrique is James Kirkwood who will be remembered as the bright particular star in "The Man from Home" recently shown here.

Nor is it a spectacle only plus a star as was "The Sheik", but a story full of human heart interest, dash and nerve, holding the interest closely from beginning to end and through it all the flaming personality of the fiery "Cigarette" the vivandiere pervades the production like a brilliant meteor.

The management of Gruwell's Ideal Theater takes a great deal of pleasure in presenting patrons with this outstanding photoplay that had enjoyed a career of uniform success wherever shown. At the Majestic at Stevens Point a couple of weeks ago the waiting lines attested the tremendous pulling power of the famous title and the no less famous star. "Under Two Flags" will be long remembered with pleasure by those who see it and it is to be given a special musical accompaniment at night by the Wisconsin Rapids Quintette augmented to a sextette. The engagement begun with a matinee this afternoon and tomorrow (Wednesday) in addition to the regular matinee there will be a special one for school children beginning at 4 o'clock or a few minutes after. The evening shows will be at 7 and 9 sharp.

PALACE TONIGHT
TONIGHT AND TOMORROW
(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

To debate upon "The Masquerader," as far as merit and quality are concerned, would be foolish. That it stands well up among the screen's best productions is free from doubt. It is a question as to which is the better, the spoken drama or the reproduction on the screen. Filled with equally as many tense moments as the play, the picture is one that will live long in the memory of any audience, as well as widely advertise itself through the medium of satisfied patrons.

It need not be said that the acting of Guy Bates Post is masterful—any more than a New Yorker need be informed that "Babe" Ruth is in a batting slump. The screen has magnified the dignity which graced the actions of Mr. Post on the stage. Words need not be spoken—a clever director has seen to that end of the production, with the result that the picture is a complete chain of thought and events, harmonizing to the most minute detail.

The substitution of a member of the English parliament, who has wrecked his life, for a struggling journalist; the journalist's great conquest in parliament, his love for the wife of the man for whom he is posing—all, as in the legitimate same dramatic force on the screen as they were on the stage. It is a production, so near perfection, that detailed criticism is a waste of time.

COMING NEXT WEEK

A challenge to fifteen hundred New York clergyman to "come, see and criticise if you can", was issued by King Baggot, director of the Universal picture "Human Hearts" when that film was shown in New York City. Baggot asserted his belief in the good intention of moving picture producers. Critics and reformers to the contrary, all branches of the film industry are striving to make clean pictures, Baggot contended.

As proof of his statements he offered his picture "Human Hearts," explaining it would be found to be thrilling and filled with interest and suspense, yet clean as a whistle and surcharged with high principles.

Hundreds of clergyman accepted. Scores of letters later were received from them highly praising the picture and complimenting Baggot and Universal.

"Human Hearts" was adapted from Hal Reid's celebrated rural drama of a decade ago. In the screen version House Peters plays the leading role. The picture is to be shown at the Palace Theatre next week.

Harold Lloyd says that it took four months to dope out the ending of "Grandma's Boy"—that final laugh that made its first audience, when it was previewed in Long Beach, Calif. laugh so hard that it held up the next act for ten minutes. The hardest part of a comedy, contends Lloyd and his producer, Hal Roach, is the "gag" for the final fadeout.

"Grandma's Boy" is hailed as Harold Lloyd's most pretentious comedy in a lineup of laugh producing photoplays that have not had one mark against them. Lloyd's newest comedy is always a step forward, and "Grandma's Boy" is a mighty big stride ahead.

It is in five reels and its laughs, thrills and suspense are built around a theme as serious as the psychology of fear. Lloyd is seen as the bashful small town boy, afraid of his own shadow. When his little old-fashioned grandmother comes to his rescue with her great wisdom and teaches him the meaning of self-confidence, he makes the sleepy little town of Blossom Bend—and the Girl in particular—sit up and take notice that the worm has turned!

"Grandma's Boy" is from the story by producer Hal Roach, and Sam Taylor and Jean Havez. Fred Newmeyer directed and the cast includes pretty Mildred Davis, Anna Townsend, Dick Sutherland, Charles Stevenson and Noah Young. THEATRES

"UNDER TWO FLAGS" A STUPENDOUS PRODUCTION

"Under Two Flags" the magnificent picturization of Ouida's famous story and play is without exception the most stupendous creation that has come to the silver sheet this year. "The Picture Magnificent" is the name given it because of the massiveness of its staging, the number of men and horses involved in the making and the tremendous scope of the story, which outshines "The Sheik" in desert atmosphere. In this production, Priscilla Dean far outdoes all her former efforts, even those in "Outside The Law" and opposite her as the mysterious "Corporal Victor of the Chasseurs d' Afrique is James Kirkwood who will be remembered as the bright particular star in "The Man from Home" recently shown here.

Nor is it a spectacle only plus a star as was "The Sheik", but a story full of human heart interest, wash and nerve, holding the interest closely from beginning to end and through it all the flaming personality of the fiery "Cigarette" the vivandiere pervades the production like a brilliant meteor.

The management of Gruwell's Ideal Theater takes a great deal of pleasure in presenting patrons with this outstanding photoplay that had enjoyed a career of uniform success wherever shown. At the Majestic at Stevens Point a couple of weeks ago the waiting lines attested the tremendous pulling power of the famous title and the no less famous star. "Under Two Flags" will be long remembered with pleasure by those who see it and it is to be given a special musical accompaniment at night by the Wisconsin Rapids Quintette augmented to a sextette. The engagement begun with a matinee this afternoon and tomorrow (Wednesday) in addition to the regular matinee there will be a special one for school children beginning at 4 o'clock or a few minutes after. The evening shows will be at 7 and 9 sharp.

PALACE TONIGHT

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

To debate upon "The Masqueraider," as far as merit and quality are concerned, would be foolish. That it stands well up among the screen's best productions is free from doubt. It is a question as to which is the better, the spoken drama or the reproduction on the screen. Filled with equally as many tense moments as the play, the picture is one that will live long in the memory of any audience, as well as widely advertise itself through the medium of satisfied patrons.

It need not be said that the acting of Guy Bates Post is masterful—any more than a New Yorker need be informed that "Babe" Ruth is in a batting slump. The screen has magnified the dignity which graced the actions of Mr. Post on the stage. Words need not be spoken—a clever director has seen to that end of the production, with the result that the picture is a complete chain of thought and events, harmonizing to the most minute detail.

The substitution of a member of the English parliament, who has wrecked his life, for a struggling journalist; the journalist's great conquest in parliament, his love for the wife of the man for whom he is posing—all, as in the legitimate same dramatic force on the screen as they were on the stage. It is a production, so near perfection, that detailed criticism is a waste of time.

MILWAUKEE PLAYS OSHKOSH IN LAST NORMAL CONTEST

NEITHER TEAM HAS CHANCE FOR CONFERENCE HONORS BUT BOTH STAND HIGH: MILWAUKEE HAS EDGE

Oshkosh, Wis,—The 1922 season in the Wisconsin Normal School Conference has all but passed into history. One more game remains to be played. Milwaukee and Oshkosh are scheduled to clash at Normal Field in Milwaukee next Friday afternoon. This game will be one of the most significant on the schedule of these two schools, for the two teams are now tied for a leading position in the conference and this contest will determine the final standing of each. Both schools have been defeated once this season, but both Milwaukee and Oshkosh have now won as many games as any school in the conference.

Two are Undefeated

Eau Claire and Whitewater have finished their schedules and each has won two games, but played only three conference games apiece.

Neither can base a conference championship on the winning of two games. Neither can Oshkosh or Milwaukee claim the championship, for each has been defeated once. There will be, therefore, no clear claim to a conference championship this year by any school. The team which comes out of this week's game the winner, however, will have won the greatest number of games in the conferenc. Both tams are desirous of securing this honor and are working overtime this week, developing new plays and perfecting old ones for this crucial contest.

Dope Favors Milwaukee

The dope is decidedly in Milwaukee's favor. Milwaukee two weeks ago decisively defeated Platteville the week afrr Plattrville had won from Oshkosh. Milwaukee also defeated Stevens Point, while Oshkosh was able only to hold the Pointers to a tie.

In material the teams appear to be evenly matched. Oshkosh has a line which has played university football defensively this year. In Curtis and G. Jensen, Oshkosh has two place kickers of unusual ability, and McAndrew, Oshkosh quarterback, is probably the fastest backfield man in the conference and a wonderful defensive man against forward passes. On the other hand, Oshkosh has failed to develop a powerful offense this year, but has depended upon long place kicks by Curtis for its scores. Oshkosh has made almost no use of forward passes.

Man Who Taught Morse Code To Edison May Quit

Visalia, Calif.—"Thirty" soon may be sent over the wires by J. C. Ward, veteran operator, who taught Thomas A Edison the Morse code. Ward, whose sixty years of telegraphing make him probably the oldest operator in point of service in the United States, has had charge of an office here thirty-five years and he wants to retire.

Ward started telegraphing back in 1862, working for the Grand Trunk railroad at Mount Clemens, Mich. Edison was a "newsboy" on the Grand Trunk railroad and the two boys became fast friends, when Edison used his spare moments to take up telegraphing under Ward's supervision. When Edison's train stopped long enough at Mount Clemens, he would learn a few letters or combinations from Ward then when his train stopped at another station he would send them back over the wires to his teacher.

Served in Civil War

During the civil war, Ward served as a telegraph operator on General Grant's staff. Later he came west for a commercial firm and worked at Sacramento in the pioneer days. Siberia called him and he worked for a while on construction jobs there.

Thirty-five years ago he came to Visalia to set up repeaters for the Visal a telegraph office. He planned to stay some six months to "get things" in running order but he has been here ever since. Once he was elected mayor of Visalia on the republican ticket when everything else went democratic five to one.

Now Ward thinks he would like to retire, so the telegraph company has asked the state railroad commission for authority to close the office. If it is granted, the veteran will be through.

Irrigate Sudan To Boost Egypt Cotton Production

Cairo, Egypt.—Moved by the decrease in Egypt's production of cotton, the Sudan government will resume the irrigation development which cabe to an end in 1913 owing to financial reasons and labor troubles.

A contract for irrigation to cost about 10,000,000 pounds, has been taken by an English firm. It is expected that in three years time 300,000 acres of cotton will be under cultivation, producing about 80,000 bales annually. Several thousand natives will find employment under Englishmen as foremen and directors.

TURKEYS HARD TO FIND THIS YEAR

EXPECT PRICES TO BE LOWER THAN LAST YEAR, BUT MANY WILL GO WITHOUT THANKSGIVING DAY

(By Associated Press)

Chicago.—Turkey, gobblers will make fewer centerpieces for Thanksgiving dinner tables this year than for many seasons, according to reports of reduced numbers from almost all turkey raising states in the middle west.

Despite this shortage, virtually all reports agree that the price will be reduced over that of last year. Throughout the central west last year turkeys sold from 60 to 75 cents a pound. This year's prices are quoted from 45 to 50 cents.

Texas, claiming to be the largest producer of turkeys, has a slightly larger number to ship out to other communities, according to authorities there. Estimates placed the number on hand at 1,250,000, with the year's crop to bring three and one-half million dollars.

Small Crop in Kentucky

Kentucky, another large producer of turkeys, had a reduced crop, according to announcements from that state. Some points reported a decrease of 50 percent in number other places reported the drop would be slight.

Ohio, Indiana, Nebraska, Missouri, Oklahoma, Iowa North Dakota and Wisconsin each had less turkeys this year to ship than last year. In most cases the decrease was less than 10 percent; in others the drop reached as much as 25 percent.

The majority of authorities stated that the general price of tukeys would be less because of the drop in the cost of feed and other things which made up the cost of raising. The extreme difficulty of raising turkeys is said to be the greatest cause for this year's crop decrease, farmers becoming discouraged with their failures of former years.

Wet springs in many states this year drowned a large number of what otherwise might have been the chief dish of a holiday dinner. Other climatic conditions made further inroads, cutting early estimates almost in half.

Seek American Help To Repair Famous Cathedral

London.—It will be no longer necessary for persons in America to cross the ocean in order to view the charms of London, for these charms are about to go to America through the aid of the motion picture.

A motion picture company is at present busy photographing the beautiful interior of St. Paul's Cathedral. The work is being carried out with the aid of improved lighting ecets so that the details of the carved stalls of Bibbons, the high marble alter, the Chapel of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, and the dome may be clearly seen. A reel of the film will be devoted to the graves and monuments of the famous Cathedral, which include those of Nelson, Wellington and Sir Arthur Sullivan.

The proceeds derived from the exhibition of this film will be given to the fund being raised for the much needed restoration of the church. It will be shown in America within two months according to the producers.

Oshkosh, Wis.—The 1922 season in the Wisconsin Normal School Conference has all but passed into history. One more game remains to be played. Milwaukee and Oshkosh are scheduled to clash at Normal Field in Milwaukee next Friday afternoon. This game will be one of the most significant on the schedule of these two schools, for the two teams are now tied for a leading position in the conference and this contest will determine the final standing of each. Both schools have been defeated once this season, but both Milwaukee and Oshkosh have now won as many games as any school in the conference.

Two are Undefeated

Eau Claire and Whitewater have finished their schedules and each has won two games, but played only three conference games apiece.

Neither can base a conference championship on the winning of two games. Neither can Oshkosh or Milwaukee claim the championship, for each has been defeated once. There will be, therefore, no clear claim to a conference championship this year by any school. The team which comes out of this week's game the winner, however, will have won the greatest number of games in the conferenc. Both tams are desirous of securing this honor and are working overtime this week, developing new plays and perfecting old ones for this crucial contest.

Dope Favors Milwaukee

The dope is decidedly in Milwaukee's favor. Milwaukee two weeks ago decisively defeated Platteville the week aftr Plattville had won from Oshkosh. Milwaukee also defeated Stevens Point, while Oshkosh was able only to hold the Pointers to a tie.

In material the teams appear to be evenly matched. Oshkosh has a line which has played university football defensively this year. In Curtis and G. Jensen, Oshkosh has two place kickers of unusual ability, and McAndrew, Oshkosh quarterback, is probably the fastest backfield man in the conference and a wonderful defensive man against forward passes. On the other hand, Oshkosh has failed to develop a powerful offense this year, but has depended upon long place kicks by Curtis for its scores. Oshkosh has made almost no use of forward passes.

Man Who Taught Morse Code To Edison May Quit

Visalia, Calif.—"Thirty" soon may be sent over the wires by J. C. Ward, veteran operator, who taught Thomas A Edison the Morse code. Ward, whose sixty years of telegraphing make him probably the oldest operator in point of service in the United States, has had charge of an office here thirty-five years and he wands to retire.

Ward started telegraphing back in 1862, working for the Grand Trunk railroad at Mount Clemens, Mich. Edison was a "newsboy" on the Grand Trunk railroad and the two boys became fast friends, when Edison used his spare moments to take up telegraphing under Ward's supervision. When Edison's train stopped long enough at Mount Clemens, he would learn a few letters or combinations from Ward then when his train stopped at another station he would send them back over the wires to his teacher.

Served in Civil War

During the civil war, Ward served as a telegraph operator on General Grant's staff. Later he came west for a commercial firm and worked at Sacramento in the pioneer days. Siberia called him and he worked for a while on construction jobs there.

Thirty-five years ago he came to Visalia to set up repeaters for the Visalia telegraph office. He planned to stay some six months to "get things" in running order but he has been here ever since. Once he was elected mayor of Visalia on the republican ticket when everything else went democratic five to one.

Now Ward thinks he would like to retire, so the telegraph company has asked the state railroad commission for authority to close the office. If it is granted, the veteran will be through.

Irrigate Sudan To Boost Egypt Cotton Production

Cairo, Egypt.—Moved by the decrease in Egypt's production of cotton, the Sudan government will resume the irrigation development which cabe to an end in 1918 owing to financial reasons and labor troubles.

A contract for irrigation to cost about 10,000,000 pounds, has been taken by an English firm. It is expected that in three years time 300,000 acres of cotton will be under cultivation, producing about 80,000 bales annually. Several thousand natives will find employment under Englishmen as foremen and directors.

TURKEYS HARD TO FIND THIS YEAR

EXPECT PRICES TO BE LOWER THAN LAST YEAR, BUT MANY WILL GO WITHOUT THANKSGIVING DAY

(By Associated Press)

Chicago.—Turkey gobblers will make fewer centerpieces for Thanksgiving dinner tables this year than for many seasons, according to reports of reduced numbers from almost all turkey raising states in the middle west.

Despite this shortage, virtually all reports agree that the price will be reduced over that of last year. Throughout the central west last year turkeys sold from 60 to 75 cents a pound. This year's prices are quoted from 45 to 50 cents.

Texas, claiming to be the largest producer of turkeys, has a slightly larger number to ship out to other communities, according to authorities there. Estimates placed the number on hand at 1,250,000, with the year's crop to bring three and one-half million dollars.

Small Crop in Kentucky

Kentucky, another large producer of turkeys, had a reduced crop, according to announcements from that state. Some points reported a decrease of 50 percent in number other places reported the drop would be slight.

Ohio, Indiana, Nebraska, Missouri, Oklahoma, Iowa North Dakota and Wisconsin each had less turkeys this year to ship than last year. In most cases the decrease was less than 10 percent; in others the drop reached as much as 25 pecent.

The majority of authorities stated that the general price of tukeys would be less because of the drop in the cost of feed and other things which made up the cost of raising. The extreme difficulty of raising turkeys is said to be the greatest cause for this year's crop decrease, farmers becoming discouraged with their failures of former years.

Wet springs in many states this year drowned a large number of what otherwise might have been the chief dish of a holiday dinner. Other climatic conditions made further inroads, cutting early estimates almost in half.

Seek American Help To Repair Famous Cathedral

London.—It will be no longer necessary for persons in America to cross the ocean in order to view the charms of London, for these charms are about to go to America through the aid of the motion picture.

A motion picture company is at present busy photographing the beautiful interior of St. Paul's Cathedral. The work is being carried out with the aid of improved lighting eccets so that the details of the carved stalls of Bibbons, the high marble alter, the Chapel of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, and the dome may be clearly seen. A reel of the film will be devoted to the graves and monuments of the famous Cathedral, which include those of Nelson, Wellington and Sir Arthur Sullivan.

The proceeds derived from the exhibition of this film will be given to the fund being raised for the much needed restoration of the church. It will be shown in America within two months according to the producers.
